THE DAILY SHORTSTORY

Poor Prognosticator

By R. RAY BAKER OBODY had any faith in the Julia's countenance. NoBODY had any faith in the weather man. Nobody ever has faith in any weather man, unless it is negative. "I see by the paper tomorrow will be fair; that means rain sure," says the cynical dear public and the dear public laughs and congratulates itself on being witty. But the joke is as aucient as Mount Arrart. You will remember that Noah's prediction of rain was treated with the same lack of respect.

But this story is no discussion of the merits or demerits of weathout the merits or demerits of weathout the paper at my weather man, will they?" she said to her self and felt a sense of satisfaction. Suddenly, without further preliminaries, the black cloud split and a torrent descended, sheets of rain cutting through the branches of the trees under which the barty sought safety.

Jacob Hanaford assumed leadership and led the way to a ledge under which a miniature cave had been formed. The opening served as a shelter, but not as an ade

Julia struggled against this, but the friends persisted aided and abetted by Jacob, and she weakened. Jacob was invited to all the parties, and nobody would have anything to do with Hiram; and the young woman enjoyed parties.

And this time nobody laughed, although some may-have wondered just how much use an umbrella would be in such a downpour. For two hours, at least, the marconed picknickers stood huddled in the prison, before an automobile was observed working its way along the muddy road, headed toward the town.
